SCHOLARSHIPMajor Research Interests

I am a clinical child psychologist with expertise in Latinx family processes and interventions. My scholarship focuses on the mental health and achievement of children in the context of marginalization based on race, ethnicity, immigrant status, or language background. My program of research aims to elucidate mechanisms within homes and schools that shape mental health and achievement outcomes, recognizing that inequities reflect complex, multi-factorial and dynamic pathways at all levels of a child's ecological context. I am particularly invested in examining cultural strengths, namely ethnic-racial identity, to promote well-being. Ultimately, my goal is to incorporate influences of culture and context into models of psychosocial interventions to better support Latinx and other marginalized children and their families.
